Three naturalized American national citizens-of Italian, Portuguese and Armenian extractions—were cited last night for outstanding contributions to the state by a minimum of $100,000 annually. The limit on the International Institute of Immigrants is 150,000 immigrants a year, Senator Pastore said, that in view of our archaic quota system the United States does not in fact admit the 150,000 immigrants allowed by law.

Mr. Sorrentino, a resident of Barrington, and Mr. Egavian, a resident of North Kingston, are prominent Rhode Island businessmen. Mr. de Carvalho, a lawyer, is Portuguese vice consul for Rhode Island. The Rev. Arthur E. Wilson, has assumed the presidency of the Institute, which found a good start in this land in 1906--the International Institute of Immigrants--under the leadership of Alexander Chmielewski, first president of the institute for 27 years.

Mr. Sorrentino, Mr. Egavian, and Mr. de Carvalho, along with several other immigrants, now work in the Institute's national headquarters.

Certainly we have a right to define, within reason, the quantity and quality of the new blood we will invite, Senator Pastore said. "But is has been my conviction and still my view that in recent years we have grown too liberal in our immigration policy. We must not be afraid to try to control our immigration, nor be afraid to try to control the economy of the world." Senator Pastore said.

Our standards have become a fiction not in keeping with the facts of life—not in keeping with the world stature and world responsibility America has assumed among the free nations of the world," Senator Pastore said.

Mr. Sorrentino was here to help. "Certainly we have a right to do something about the economy of the world," Senator Pastore said, "and we have a right to do something about our immigration policy. We must not be afraid to try to control our immigration, nor be afraid to try to control the economy of the world." Senator Pastore said.
