RHODE ISLAND COLLEGE
Quo Vadis RIC?

America's demographic profile is changing. Its citizenry between the ages of fifty and fifty-nine has risen 17 percent. Close to one-third of its college population is over twenty-five. One half of them are part-time. Not only is the age pattern shifting, but learning environments are being supplemented with television, travel and independent study. Students are no longer accepting, pro forma, the myth that colleges and institutions hold master keys to fame and fortune.

A recent article in the Chronicle of Higher Education (November 27, 1978) describes the "invisible university." Adult learners are forsaking the ivy walls for "do it yourself" instruction. Utilizing a variety of media materials, field trips, local libraries and museums, they have planned self-study programs in vocational areas promising immediate returns for their efforts.

Yesterday, a student handed me a five-page proposal for a graduate program that he had developed to meet not only his needs but those of others in the same occupation. It was interesting to note that the word skill had been used 15 times. RIC's continuing education course titles and enrollment figures for the 1978 fall semester indicate increasing interest in "hands on" rather than cultural enrichment subjects, i.e., First Course in Computers, Photo I, Lettering and Layout, Occupational Health Nurses, Basic Writing Skills.

No magic, master syllabus is available to meet fully the immediate or long-term educational needs of Rhode Islanders for the next decade. Certain steps can be taken, however, to provide a framework in which to adapt to future market needs. The college should maintain an up-dated inventory of its human and physical resources and examine and evaluate its existing and alternative delivery systems. In the days ahead, it must significantly modify its academic schedule, greatly expand its campus parameters and take a critical look at its "tried and true" teaching techniques and strategies. Academic excellence will not be compromised. To the contrary, it will mean that RIC will have placed itself in a strategic position for the 1980's.

Newsletter to Continue in January

December 15 marks the last issue of What's New(s) at RIC for the fall semester. Publication of the bi-weekly newsletter will resume on Friday, January 19, 1979. News items for this issue should be received in writing at the News Bureau, Roberts 111, by noon, Friday, January 12.

Nine issues of What's New(s) are planned for the 1979 spring semester. A list of the publication dates and deadlines for each issue will appear in the January 19 issue of the newsletter. Copies of this list will also be sent to the college's executive officers, deans, directors and department chairs.

To all those who have contributed to What's New(s) — thank you. Your continued support is essential to the successful dissemination of information within the RIC community.

ROBERT M. BOBERG, associate professor of music, served as adjudicator for the National Music Teachers' Association at the Music Mansion in Providence on December 2, 1978. The event determined the Rhode Island state winner of high school-age pianists who will now compete at the division level prior to national competition. Each contestant played five selections including Mozart's Piano Concerto #15 in B Flat Major.

Professor Boberg also served as a participating conductor of the "Christmas Festival of Baptist Choirs" at the Phillips Memorial Baptist Church in Cranston on December 3. Of the 14 selections sung by the massed choir of 120 voices, he conducted 8, including carols from European countries, a spiritual and selections from Handel's Messiah.

JEANETTE TAMAGINI, professor of counselor education, received a certificate of course completion from Project HERS, Wellesley College. HERS is a national project designed to identify and prepare women in higher education for administrative positions. The project consisted of weekend workshops from November 1977 through October 1978, dealing with management, fiscal, and personnel issues and skills.

What's Happening

A conference on "Parenting: The State of the Art" will be held on campus January 11, 1979. Sponsored by the Child Abuse and Neglect Training Project which is based at RIC, the conference is administered by the Rhode Island Consortium for Continuing Education in Community Welfare and Human Services and Rhode Island Social and Rehabilitative Services. Cheryl Livneh of the Child Abuse and Neglect Training Project is coordinating the program.

The conference is designed for people currently leading parenting groups and those interested in becoming involved in parenting education. At the morning session of the program, a group of panelists representing family and social service programs in the state will discuss "The Scope of Parenting Programs in Rhode Island." Group discussions will precede and follow a luncheon in the Faculty Center. Reservations for the conference can be made with Cheryl Livneh, Adams Library--New Wing, through December 15.

The Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education has announced FY 1979 proposal deadlines under the COMPREHENSIVE PROGRAM COMPETITION. The program seeks to support proposals concerned with reform, innovation and improvement of postsecondary education. All proposals will be measured against the following three general criteria: Is the proposal cost-effective? Does it have impact beyond the applicant's setting? Is it a learner-centered improvement?

A five-page, preliminary proposal is due on or before January 9, 1979, followed by a final submission by invitation in March. Additional information on this program or assistance in developing a proposal for submission is available from the Bureau of Grants and Sponsored Projects, ext. 8228.

New Grant Handbook In Works

The Bureau of Grants and Sponsored Projects has completed a new guide to proposal development and program management. Entitled Everything You Wanted to Know About Grants, But No One Would Tell You, the publication features a recommended "Six-Stage, Thirty-Day Proposal Development Sequence" designed to guide faculty and staff through the essential steps in the preparation of a proposal. Also included in the handbook is extensive material on the development of contracts and cooperative agreements and a comprehensive section which explains the procedures involved in the administration of a grant once it is awarded.

The bureau expects the handbook to be available for distribution to all faculty and staff by the beginning of the spring semester. Workshops will be held for interested faculty and staff on the use of this guide. One major workshop will involve a representative of the Office of Federal Programs of AASCU who will work with us on identification of funding sources and proposal development. A key segment of this workshop will be a presentation on the CETA legislation and funding possibilities under that Act.

John O'Neill, director of the Bureau of Grants and Sponsored Projects and coordinator for program development, will also offer a three-credit Continuing Education course, "How to Write and Administer a Successful Grant Proposal," in the spring semester.

RIC United Way Contributions Increase

A final report issued by the college's 1978 United Way Campaign Committee, chaired by Dr. Sheri Smith, indicates increased support by members of the RIC community. Sixty-three percent of the college's full-time employees participated. Contributions totaling $24,676 were raised this year, an increment of $1,941 over 1977. Participation through payroll deductions, approximately 63 percent, also increased from 264 employees in 1977 to 337 this year.

While the 1978 campus campaign was successful in surpassing the 1977 totals, the campaign fell somewhat short of reaching its goals. The committee had established this year's goals at a 70 percent participation with 80 percent participating through payroll deductions for a total goal of $27,500 in contributions.
