$1 million Feinstein Foundation gift; largest private grant in RIC history

At the Rhode Island College opening coffee hour on August 28, President John Nazarian gratefully accepted the College’s first-ever $1 million gift, which was presented by the Rhode Island-based Feinstein Foundation. In announcing the gift, the proceeds of which will be used to benefit the College, its faculty, and in particular, the Feinstein gift is “a clear state­ development,” the President later expressed that the Feinstein gift is “a clear state­ development.”

Noting that this contribution signals that Rhode Island College has “come of age in the realm of major gifts,” Nazarian later expressed that the Feinstein gift is “a clear state­ment of confidence in Rhode Island College, its faculty, and in particular, the School of Education and Human Development,” which, the President noted, “has brought honor to the College as the teaching teacher training institution in the state.”

President Nazarian indicated that the School is not restricted in its use of the proceeds from the endowment, and said, “It is my recommendation that these funds be used for faculty development, research, and travel, among other worthwhile but other­wise unmet needs.”

The Feinstein Foundation and its namesake, philanthropist Alan Shawn Feinstein, are dedicated to improving conditions within society.
The Way We Were...

This popular item in What's News will continue this year in order for you to be able to revisit your alma mater with a selection of photos from the past — the College's past, whether the current era (Rhode Island College) or past eras (Rhode Island College of Education or Rhode Island State Normal School). We invite your contribution of old photos, along with sufficient information about each such as who's in the photo and what they are doing, the year it was taken and place (if possible). In the meantime, we'll continue searching our files for interesting pictures of past College life.

In Memoriam —

History Prof. Donald Sippel

Donald Sippel, 57, of Providence, a professor of ancient history at Rhode Island College for 30 years, died July 28 in the Philip Hulitar Hospice Care In-Patient Center. He was the husband of Navah L. Steed.

Born Nov. 10, 1938, in Cincinnati, Ohio, a son of the late Theodore E. and Eva (Boothby) Sippel, he lived in Woonsocket before moving to Providence 15 years ago. He studied at the University of Cincinnati earning a bachelor's degree in history, a master's degree in medieval history and a Ph.D. in ancient history.

Joining the RIC faculty in 1965, he previously had been a research fellow at the American Numismatic Society in New York City for a year and a lecturer at the University of Cincinnati for a year while a student.

He was a member of the American Historical Association, the American Numismatic Society, the American Philological Association, the Society for the Promotion of Hellenistic Studies (London), and the American Association of Ancient Historians.

He was awarded a National Endowment for the Humanities Fellowship and was a Sherlock Holmes scholar.

Besides his wife, he leaves a sister, Cheryl Kampil of Greenwood, S.C.

A memorial service was held at St. Martin's Episcopal Church, Providence.

School-to-work institute offered

Rhode Island College is offering an eight-week institute to bring information and hands-on experience in School-to-Work transition to educators and business people.

The institute will provide experience in practical curriculum development to integrate SCANS competencies into teaching and training. (SCANS is the term used for student competencies identified in 1993 by the U.S. Department of Labor's Secretaries Commission on Achieving Necessary Skills.)

The institute will run from Oct. 8 through Nov. 26. Information and work sessions will be held on Tuesdays at the RIC campus from 4 to 7 p.m. Field visits and presentations will take place at various locations off campus on Thursdays at either 2 to 4 p.m. or 4 to 6 p.m.

The content of the institute, entitled “School-to-Work (STW) Training Institute,” was developed at RIC by a state-wide team of experts in the field of School-to-Work. RIC members included Elizabeth Dalton, James McCrystal, David Nelson, J. Dawson Sienko, Nancy Sullivan and William E. Swigart.

The institute will help participants answer these questions:

• What are the skills that people need to succeed in the world of work?
• What qualities and skills are needed by business in its workforce?
• How can you fit new skill instruction into an already expanding curriculum?
• What models exist for STW integration and systems change, and how can they be practically applied to the classroom or business?
• How can businesses and schools work together to develop a more prepared workforce for the future?
• The course, subsidized through the Rhode Island Human Resource Investment Council and the Rhode Island School-to-Work Office, is being offered at the cost of $150. Three graduate or undergraduate credits can be earned through successful completion.

Enrollment is limited. For a complete course description or to register, contact the Office of Continuing Education and Summer Sessions at 401-456-8091.

Professional development institutes offered by School of Ed/Continuing Ed

In order to provide teachers with professional development opportunities, Rhode Island College's School of Education and Human Development and the Office of Continuing Education and Summer Sessions have developed several Professional Development Institutes. Each institute is offered for one graduate credit and meets for 15 hours of class time.

All institutes are guided by RIC policies and are held on the RIC campus. Attendance at all sessions is required.

The fall semester's offerings include:

1. Assessment in Mathematics for Middle-Level Teachers (4-9)
2. Profile Analysis of WISC-III
3. Teaching and Learning Through the Multiple Intelligences
4. Strategies for Creating Harmony in the Middle-Level Teachers (4-8)
5. Team Building
6. Mathematics for the Middle School Curriculum
7. Authentic Assessment
8. Community-Based Folk Art
9. Without Geography, Young Children are Lost
10. Soil and Water Quality Testing
11. Sound Waves Across the Curriculum
12. Cooperative Learning: Principles and Management
13. Developing and Implementing Integrated Units
14. Strategies Involving Cross-cultural Families in the Educational Process
15. Home Page Workshop
16. E-Mail and the WWW
17. The costs that follow include all tuition and fees: one institute $160; two institutes $285; three institutes $415; four institutes $540.
18. All registration will be done by mail. Call the RIC Office of Continuing Education and Summer Sessions at 401-456-8091 for institute descriptions, dates and a registration form.

Multi-talented Rhode Island leader to head Alumni Affairs

by Cynthia L. Sousa
What's News Writer

Ellie "Ellie" O'Neill has accepted the position of interim director of Alumni Affairs. O'Neill comes to Rhode Island College after serving for 10 years as the program director and alumni coordinator for Leadership Rhode Island, a central program of the Greater Providence Chamber of Commerce.

O'Neill's expertise includes alumni programming, the development of leadership skills, annual fund-raising, volunteer board development, publications, budget development and major event planning.

Reporting to Marguerite M. Brown, RIC director of development, O'Neill said she is delighted to be on board and is "looking forward to building upon programs already in place and adding new programs for alumni.'

Her primary responsibilities include creating, organizing and implementing alumni programs to develop a strong base of support for the College; to enrich the experiences of alumni in order to instill a sense of pride in the College; to establish policies, programs and services in support of institutional resource acquisition goals and to represent the interests of the College to the Alumni Association.

She has already met with Brown, Cheryl Precopio, Class of 1991, assistant director of development/Annual Fund, and Syd Cohen, Class of 1940, president of the Alumni Association, and said she is enthusiastic about working with them on upcoming projects such as the Alumni Golf tournament scheduled for Sept. 30 (see page 12) and the Annual Fund.

In addition, O'Neill said the fact that a new, updated alumni directory is due out at the beginning of 1997 indicates "the importance of the support of the 35,000 alumni, the majority of whom reside in the state, to the College."

O'Neill said she is delighted with the reception she's received. "Everyone has been so friendly and helpful."

From 1988 to 1992, O'Neill was a member of the Barrington Town Council, serving for two years as its vice president. For her "invaluable work for introducing and promoting good government issues," as a delegate to the 1986 Constitutional Convention, O'Neill was cited by Common Cause of Rhode Island.

In 1990, she received the Junior League of Rhode Island's President's Award for "Outstanding Volunteer Service in the Community."

Her current volunteer efforts include director of the Citizen's Scholarship Foundation, of the Barrington Senior Center Foundation, of the Barrington Booster Club and of the Parks and Recreation Committee. She is also a court-appointed Special Advocate (CASA).

O'Neill received a B.A. from Ladycliff College in New York. She lives in Barrington with her husband Stephen, and is the mother of three children.

Editorial Error
What's News apologizes for errors made in the June issue of the publication concerning the appointment of Anne Walsh Cain, Class of 1964, to head the Alumni Fund as honorary chair of this year's drive. Anne's last name was misspelled. In addition, the editor regrets the mistaken identity of Anne's husband's first name in the same article. Anne is who many Rhode Islanders will remember as a director of the Rhode Island General Federation of Women's Clubs, CRF Booster Club and of the Parks and Recreation Committee. She is also a Court-appointed Special Advocate (CASA).

When you receive this directory, be sure to fill in the form and return it to the alumni office.

The company asks them to send their names and addresses for verification purposes only.

Ric offers CEUs to social workers

Social workers who are licensed and who practice in Rhode Island are required to complete 30 continuing education contact hours every two years. At least three hours must be in the area of cross-cultural practice to include the alleviation of oppression. In addition, at least three contact hours must be in the area of professional ethics.

All social workers licensed in Rhode Island will be required to have completed 15 contact hours by April 15, 1997, according to the RIC Continuing Education in Social and Human Services brochure.

Rhode Island College has several offerings that meet these requirements.

Workshops on sexual abuse, clinical and practical skills, social work practice and liability and ethical issues will be offered during the fall semester.

Call the Office of Continuing Education and Summer Sessions at 401-456-8091 for more information.

Alumni directory in verification phase

The telephone verification phase of the College's Alumni Directory, in which each alumnus can make final changes to his or her listing, is in progress according to representatives from Bernard C. Harris Publishing Company Inc.

The company asks them to order a directory by calling 800-624-0191 or by filling out the coupon that accompanies the directory. The cost for the directory is $59.99 (hard bound) or $46.99 (soft bound). A handling charge of $7.95 will also be charged. The directory is scheduled for distribution early next year.

If for any reason, you have not been contacted by a representative from Harris by Oct. 7, you may contact them directly at 1-800-877-6554.
The National Science Foundation has awarded a $36,860 grant for a project that will improve instrumentation and laboratory facilities in chemistry, it was announced by Richard N. Keogh, director of Research and Grants Administration. Project director David L. Greene, professor in the physical sciences department, said the money will go mostly to up-dating computer software to a state-of-the-art level.

He said half of the funds will go to upgrading instruments such as the spectrophotometer by interfacing with fairly high-powered PCs and half to introduce molecular mechanics via computer simulations.

Thus, the project seeks to implement major changes in the manner in which computers are utilized in the undergraduate chemistry curriculum.

Recent developments in computer hardware and software have made data acquisition, data manipulation, and molecular mechanics calculations possible at an undergraduate level that were inconceivable 10 years ago, and too expensive to consider five years ago, according to the project summary. This program provides a cost-effective model for the integration of computer technology into the chemistry curriculum of a medium-sized college, it stated.

Laboratories that will be most impacted by these additions include organic, physical, analytical and inorganic chemistry, instrumental analysis and the undergraduate research program.

Assisting Greene on the project were Charles J. Marzzacco, Marc C. Ertan-Lamontagne and James and Elaine Magyar, all of the physical science faculty.

RIC, North Scituate School are partners in Apple grant program

Rhode Island College and North Scituate School are among 10 "partners" selected nationally from 437 applicants in the Apple Computer Partners in Education (PIE) grants program this year and, as such, will share in a $1 million grant designed to foster new, innovative ways to use technology in the classroom.

The program will benefit both North Scituate School and RIC, explains William J. Oehlkers, professor of education, in an interview, in that it will help develop technology use in the school, which has been an interest for them, while providing good teacher training for RIC.

Oehlkers says the RIC School of Education and Human Development has been talking with the North Scituate School people for two years on an Expanding Communities program.

Under this program, which is funded by the PIE grant, teachers at North Scituate School will restructure the learning environment through project-based cooperation to accommodate the learning activities that integrate third, fourth and fifth grades, as well as special needs students.

The focus of each project will be a community issue chosen by the class, building relationships with various local and state agencies. In-service and pre-service teachers will work in teams to enhance the classroom curriculum and develop ways to replicate these strategies in other schools, according to Apple.

Depending on the project, Apple will provide a variety of technologies to the 1996 grant recipients. Additionally, five educators from each partnership attended an Apple-hosted two-week professional development retreat July 28-Aug. 9 to jump start their projects.

Teams will tackle issues such as integrating computer technology into student-centered learning environments, use of the computer as a multi-purpose tool; creating multimedia presentations, Web pages, publications, reports, etc., and determining how the partnership can benefit both participating institutions.

Oehlkers and James E. Davis, associate professor of educational studies, attended for RIC, and Jack Wright, principal, and Amanda Brown and Lisa Haurohan LaRose attended for North Scituate.

This is the first time RIC has been selected to participate in the PIE program, now in its 15th year. Over this period, Apple has contributed $28 million to schools in the program.

Oehlkers says the RIC-North Scituate partnership will get about $12,000 the first year and over a two-year period maybe $150,000 for equipment and everything. He stresses that this is "just a ballpark figure" on his part.

Anxious to shed those extra pounds? ‘Why Weight?’ — MSW grad lost 155 lbs. and has kept it off!

by George LA Tour
What's News Associate Editor

Why Weight? is a weight loss and relapse prevention program initiated by a 1994 master-of-social-work graduate from Rhode Island College after she had shed 155 lbs. starting some 10 years ago and managed to keep it off through a three-track approach — eating sound nutritionally balanced meals, regular exercise and “the psycho-social aspect” or discovering the reasons she overate in the first place.

Lauren P. Canuel of North Providence considers this third component the “most important” part, the one, once understood, that is the key to weight loss and overall well-being.

She says eating was her coping mechanism, food the drug she used to stifle the negative experiences of growing up in a “dysfunctional family where alcohol was present.”

By the time she graduated from high school, she weighed 200 lbs. Eventually, her weight rose to 285 lbs. and then some — “my scale only went up to 300.”

Today, at age 31, she is a svelte 130 lbs. and says half-jokingly “If I knew I was going to be this gorgeous, I would have dropped the weight a long time before I did.”

Talking with a reporter over a salad lunch recently at the Little Inn in Johnston, (the salad filling the spot in Johnston’s innards usually reserved for chocolate-covered donuts), Canuel recalled her odyssey from becoming a big girl to that of a toning approach — eating sound nutritionally balanced meals, regular exercise and “the psycho-social aspect” or discovering the reasons she overate in the first place.

The youngest of three daughters of Donald and Jean Canuel of Fall River, she started to gain weight about age 8.

“I would eat when happy, when sad, when fearful, when lonely. Whenever I would eat to cope with the negative emotions I had. When the kids at school made fun of me, I ate more.”

Scale-busting 285 lbs.

By the time she was a 21-year-old senior at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, she had risen to the scale-busting 285 lbs.

She recalls that she was always considered a happy, out-going person and strove to keep up the facade.

Then, one night she was dressing to go out with friends and “found I couldn’t hold the green dress.”

“I tried on all my black clothes and all the dark dark blue and nothing was comfortable. I felt I dropped down on a pile of clothes and sobbed.”

Getting ready to graduate with honors with a degree in education and human service administration, Canuel “knew I’d never have a job. I was a disaster.”

She signed up at the “Y” for a six-week course and found she was the fattest in the class. Additionally, she reports, she also suffered from hypotension.

At the end of a month, she had dropped 25 lbs. Then she signed up for gym classes three days a week and lost 60 lbs. more.

New-found self esteem

With her new-found self esteem she felt “I was the most beautiful 200 lb. woman in the world. That confidence helped me get a job,” she relates.

That job was in a group home where she worked on problem solving and behavior management with adult schizophrenics, eventually rising to the position of assistant program manager.

By March 1989, she had lost another 45 lbs., leaving another 25 to go to reach her goal.

“I felt attractive, but I wanted to be done (with the weight loss process).”

She went to Nutri/System Weight Loss Center in Seekonk for further assistance in her struggle.

“They told me losing weight is tough,” she relates with a chuckle. “I said, listen, lady, I just lost 150 lbs. so I know all about it.

“They hired me on the spot as a part-time instructor,” Canuel relates with satisfaction.

She worked at Nutri/System for three years, seeing 75 to 100 clients a week “The clients all wanted my class because they heard I had done it, lost so much weight.”

Began grad studies

During this time Canuel began her graduate studies at RIC. At the Hoffmann Institute in Middletown, R.I., as a primary therapist and marketing consultant, doing some public speaking and providing outreach services for large corporations.

Upon her graduation from the MSW program at RIC, she was hired as a clinical social worker at the Rhode Island Hospital Child Development Center, a position she describes as “a good job.”

She also married David DeQuattro, an architect.

“I knew I was going to be this gorgeous, I would have dropped the weight a long time before I did.”

Last year she formalized her weight-loss program and incorporated it as Why Weight? She placed ads in the newspapers in March “and the phone started ringing.”

Having begun her crusade for personal weight loss 10 years ago, and having reached her goal and maintained it, she now specializes in relapse prevention and long-term maintenance for her clients.

“People who were once overweight have a propensity to gain weight again, and only exercise, proper nutrition and changing negative thought patterns will keep it off,” assures Lauren Canuel, who can be reached at (401) 232-1884 if you’d like to discuss weight loss with her.

Christopher J. Naylor Memorial Road Race set for Oct. 13

The first annual Christopher J. Naylor Memorial 5K Road Race is scheduled for Sunday, Oct. 13, at 10 a.m. at the Boat House at Roger Williams Park in Providence.

Naylor obtained his masters degree in social work from the Rhode Island College in May of 1995. In August, he married Linda Castagna and began applying to schools to obtain his Ph.D. He was working part-time at Intown Parking in downtown Providence.

On Dec. 20, 1995, while working, was shot and killed during a robbery. He was 35 years old. The suspect was caught and awaits trial.

Proceeds from the memorial road race will go to Rhode Island College and the Community College of Rhode Island in the form of scholarships. Fund organizers Michael Naylor, Chris’ brother, and friend Tommy Cocci, hope to “raise $25,000 over the next few years to keep Chris’ name and spirit alive.”

The entry fee is $10 before Oct. 1st deadline. The first 200 entrants will receive t-shirts and all entrants will receive a raffle ticket for a $250 gift certificate to Elmwood Sports. Cash prizes will total over $1,000. The race is sanctioned by USA Track and Field. Walkers are also welcome.

For an entry form or to become a sponsor or make a donation, contact the Christopher J. Naylor Memorial Fund, c/o Intown Parking, at 401-273-9466.

HBS teachers receive grant

Henry Barnard School’s Mary Poye, associate professor (grade four), and James LaCroix, assistant professor (music), have been recently selected as co-recipients of a $2,500 music education grant from the National Association of Laboratory Schools. Their research, entitled, “Does Music Instruction Improve a Child’s Reading Ability?” will be conducted during the 1996-97 academic year at HBS.

This study will be conducted to determine the extent to which music can improve the reading ability of children. In September, children in grades three, four, five and six will be pre-tested. Based on the test results, the children will be divided into control and experimental groups. Through collaborative teaching, Poye and LaCroix will provide a group of children with additional integrated teaching with focus on music and language arts curriculum.

This study will explore new ways of implementing the National Standards in the Arts as well as help meet the reading needs of children. The study will also investigate ways of integrating music in the reading curriculum.
Foundation Golf Tourney a success!

The day was clear and sunny and the “golf flag” of the Rhode Island College Foundation flew over the Quinnesett Country Club on July 22, as the Foundation’s annual golf tournament got underway.

At upper right (l-r), Norman Cotter, owner of Pine Valley Country Club and a major donor of prizes, looks over the prizes with John Fitta, RIC assistant vice president and controller. At right, Patricia Tondreau, one of the newest trustees of the RIC Foundation, and Foundation President Henry Nardone wish each other well, just before the shotgun start. And below right, some of the sponsors of the event, who are also golfers, include Darren Lopes of Fleet Bank, Joanne Mendes of the Miller Brewing Company, Steve DeWare of the R.I. Insurance Agents Association, RIC President John Nazarian, and Joseph Beretta Sr. of The Robinson Green Beretta Corp.

and CIRI with 3-port outlets to accommodate telephone, data transmission and videoconferencing. The College would receive 3,600 outlets. Phase II includes installation of digital-based communications switches to permit increased capacity, high-speed modem calling, and video conferencing. Essentially, a new phone system for the College, the President reported. In addition, satellite receivers and distribution equipment would permit full-motion inter-active video permitting teleconferencing and for the College for $3.12 million for 3,122 new computer work stations to be apportioned among the three institutions.

If voters approve Referendum #3, Rhode Island College will construct "a state-of-the-art information processing center for" $9.5 million Performing Arts Classroom Facility. The 50,000 square foot structure would house the College's performing arts programs of music, theater, and dance, and include classrooms, faculty offices and a variety of rehearsal, practice and performance spaces.

In addition, the project calls for a 240-seat performance space and the renovation of Roberts Hall, built in the mid-1950s to serve 1,000 students. (The College's enrollment is around 9,000 students.)

President Nazarian called the project the College's "highest priority. Rhode Island College is recognized as an academic leader in the performing arts, and we are very much overdue for a facility that approaches the excellence of our faculty."

Robert Elm, chair of the newly created Department of Performing Arts/Music/Theater/Dance, said, "The quality of our teaching is greatly affected by the lack of a physical facility that would allow us to reach our full potential as the location of Rhode Island's performing arts. "Emphasizing the "dile" need for the facility, the department notes that "we will be calling upon financial support for a performing arts center" and more than 30,000 people are drawn to an arts event at the College each year.

Referendum #3 also includes some $14.5 million for the Community College of Rhode Island to construct an 85,000-square-foot addition to the Knight Campus in Warwick, and $9.8 million for renovation and new construction work on three buildings at URI: Greene, Ranger and Balleine Hall.

The President also announced the formation of a campaign team organized among the three institutions and the Office of Higher Education to coordinate marketing, media relations and fundraising efforts. He said, "we want to make sure that you have whatever you need to help make this a successful campaign."

According to committee members, the selected campaign slogan is "VOTE SMART Nov: 5: 2+3=A Brighter Future for Rhode Island."

In noting that all monies used to promote the campaign must come from private sources, the President said, "we will be calling upon financial support from the College Foundation, the Alumni Association, and Student Community Government, and will be seeking help from the unions and from other private sources."

Office of Higher Education Commissioner Stephen T. Hubbert, who attended and spoke at the convocation, said, "My office and the Board of Governors will support all efforts to help our students. I ask you to join all of us and come together and talk about the value of the passage of the referendum and what they will do for our state and its citizens. Let us join together in serving Rhode Island."

Opening convocation

the services we provide. I will be an advocate for higher education...to get the word out to the public as to what we are accomplishing."

The President thanked Hubbert for joining in the opening convocation and went on to report on a number of College-wide accomplishments and items of interest. Among those included:

• the full implementation of the General Education 2000 Program that begins this fall
• the 30th anniversary of the "very successful" Upward Bound Program that is needed to help minority students reach their full potential
• the permanent reorganization of the Center for Telecommunications Technology to incorporate the departments of economics and finance, providing a new and important accounting and computer information systems
• the formation of a Department of Performing Arts, on a two-year trial basis, combining theater and dance with the music department.
• the construction of all-new tennis courts.
• building improvements to meet ADA standards on doorways, elevators, and restrooms.
• the expectation of three DCVF buildings on the East Campus to become available to the College during the next year all will be vacated within two years (The President noted that an announcement concerning one of the buildings would be made within the next two months.)
• the near completion of Phase II of the Campus Mall Project
• state funding of $1.5 million for additional acquisitions in the system-wide budget for FY97 at $31.2 million.
• RIC to receive $550,000 of a $26 million loan from the Rhode Island Health and Education Building Corporation - authorized by the Board of Governors - for the purchase of technology and computer equipment and software to be paid back over five years.

Referring to the continuing financial problems of the state and paraphrasing a popular 1930's political slogan that "prosperity is not just around the corner", the President called on the community to "continue to remain steadfast in our struggle to maintain quality of economic growth at a price that students and their families can afford."

In reviewing this year's budget, he said, "this is an extremely tight budget, but one with which I believe we can maintain our standards, so long as we spend each dollar as if it were money out of our own personal checking accounts."

President reinforced the "need for the college to re-focus and re-design its curricula to reflect the changing needs of the community and to continue discussion within their departments and to report their findings to the appropriate presidential officers."

He announced that recently passed legislation by the General Assembly has further delegated authority to the College and the system of higher education to pay their own bills. "Spontaneous applause rang out when the President said that Donovan Dining Hall, which had been paying billsender issued by the College. In addition, the President reported that third-party funded operations, "including grant-sponsored projects, would undertake procurement without going through the state purchasing."

"I do not expect legislation that year's budget, for the first time in many years, does not reflect a tuition increase," he said. "This will help us to keep our programs within reach of more of our students and their fami-

In remarks about this year's first incoming students, the President noted that over 2,500 minority students, more out-of-state students, and more College coursework are enrolled. Remember, he said, "student recruitment and retention is a responsibility of every one of us."

Both the President and Hubbert spoke about the importance of the passage of the system-wide higher education bond issues approved by the General Assembly to be held before the voters for their approval at the general election on Nov. 5.

"The first bond issue is for the $41 million higher education telecommunications initiative, of which the College's share would be $7.6 million; he said. "The money would be used to initiate and upgrade telecommunications systems at RIC, URI, and the Community College of Rhode Island enabling the campuses, students, and public to tie into the world through state-of-the-art computer technology. Specifically for RIC, the President said, the money would mean a new phone system, access to teleconferencing and new computer work stations.

Explaining that the legislation "understood how eight years of progressively tighter budgets had taken a toll on crucial capital projects, they brought forward another bond issue for $34 million for projects listed by the Board of Governors as their highest priority."

Besides an addition to the CCRI Warwick campus and rehabilitation and construction of three buildings at URI, "the bond issue provides $9.5 million for the College's highest priority project and the formation of a Department of Performing Arts Classroom Facility."

The College is recognized as an academic leader in the performing arts and we are very much overdue for a facility that approaches the excellence of our faculty.

What the legislature gave us, he said, "is but an opportunity, and we must capitalize on that opportunity."

Hubbert said his office, the Board of Governors, and representatives from the three institutions have "already begun a campaign to build public awareness of the bond issues." Both CEO's asked that the RIC community join together in this effort to ensure passage on Nov. 5. "Public education serves Rhode Island first," Hubbert said.
Fall student-athletes get head start on season!

While many people were still enjoying the beach and other summer activities, student-athletes who will be representing Rhode Island College on Fall athletic teams were already back on campus preparing for the season ahead. This latter part of the August pilgrimage represented double session workouts for over one hundred student-athletes, coaches and support personnel.

Men's and women's soccer, women's volleyball, men's and women's cross country, women's tennis and cheerleading are back working hard. Here's what's ahead.

Women's Soccer What a difference a year makes. The women's soccer program in just its second season has doubled the number of student-athletes trying out for a spot on this year's roster. Second-year head coach Nicole Barber and assistant Joy Woog are relying heavily on a solid group of returning veterans combined with a talented class of freshmen and transfers. The ladies kick-off their season on September 7th with a weekend tournament at Springfield College.

Men's Soccer Coaches John Tomlinson and Steve Frosberg have been walking around campus for months in anticipation of this season. This could be the year that Coach Tomlinson's squad makes a run for the Little East Title. The returnees to watch are All-Conference selection Erik White and All-Conference Rookie of the Year Rui Dias. Freshmen Pete Gallo (RI All-Stater) and Tom Jenkins (four-year starter at Portsmouth HS) will get plenty of playing time. URI transfer David Lisker and South Carolina transfer Jeff Lavigne look to be immediate impact players. The team will open its season on Sept. 7 at the Curry College Invitational.

Women's Volleyball Coach Kris Norberg could have one of the most talented teams in her coaching tenure at RIC. A solid group of veterans combined with a very talented group of freshmen could spell SUCCESS for the Anchorwomen. Only time will tell but if the pre-season workouts are any indication of what lies ahead this could be a very interesting and exciting season. Coach Norberg is assisted by Valerie Boutin. The team will open its season at the Springfield College Invitational on Sept. 6.

Women's Cross-Country Matt Hirt, the elder statesman of the RIC coaching staff, will once again be at the helm as his harriers start another season. This year's team will be lead by captains Valerie Verducci and Michelle Capobianco. Coach Hird expects great things from these two veterans. A solid group of veterans plus a number of talented newcomers could be the combination this squad has been looking for Coach Hird and his team will open their season at Stonehill College on Sept. 12.

Men's Cross-Country The 1996 season will be one of rebuilding for Coach Buddy Kane. Only two returnees will be back from last season's squad, so the impetus will be to cultivate the incoming freshmen to build a solid foundation for the future. There is some talent on this team and as the freshmen mature anything can happen. Stay tuned as they open their season at Bryant College on Sept. 14.

Fall sports season begins!

Baseball/Softball Alumni Golf Tourney Oct. 6

Bannister Gallery fall/winter exhibitions —
To feature Art Alumni Invitational; Jim Goldberg’s photos of runaways, ‘Raised by Wolves’

On Thursday, Sept. 19, at 7 p.m. in the gallery a talk entitled “Paths in the Field” with Jay Lacouture of Salve Regina University will be held offering a discussion on the life and career paths of RIC art alumni. The exhibit opening is Thursday, Sept. 12, from 7-9 p.m. A closing reception will be held Sunday, Oct. 6 from 1-3 p.m. The exhibit is free and open to the public.

As a focal point for this year's College October Series, "Children in the Street," Bannister Gallery will present a powerful exhibition of photographs and mixed-media works by artist/photographer Jim Goldberg Oct. 10-Nov. 2 entitled "Raised by Wolves." The opening on Oct. 10 will be from 7-9 p.m.

Goldberg gradually entered the underworld of runaways and street kids in San Francisco and Los Angeles, eventually bringing this world into view through a series of gritty but compassionate photos, video, texts and artifacts. These images and objects, combined with writings by the runaways, expand the traditional boundaries of documentary photography and urge the viewer to confront the reality faced by homeless children.

The exhibit is free and open to the public. Regular gallery hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 11 a.m.-4 p.m. and Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 8-9. For further information on up-coming exhibits watch for articles in What's News or call O'Malley at 456-9765.

Bannister Gallery in the Rhode Island College Art Center will showcase four exhibits in its fall/winter program, including selected works from RIC art alumni and the striking “Raised by Wolves: Photographs and Documents of Runaways” by Jim Goldberg. Other exhibits scheduled are Keith Long’s “Wall Sculpture Nov. 7-27 and James Janicek's “Recent Pictures” Dec. 5-21. The Art Alumni Invitational Sept. 12-Oct. 6 draws from among the many alumni now leading lives centered in artistic activity.

These include those who are full-time professionals, those who exhibit, those who teach and those who have been recognized for their creative involvement. “Because of the great number of visual arts graduates, over 600 in the past 25 years,” according to Dennis O’Malley, gallery director, “and our desire to show work not a definitive statement.”

“We envision it to be the first in a series which will highlight the talent and accomplishments of this broad community of artists.” Included in the exhibition are works by James Buonacorsi, Lisa Champagne, Patricia Cronin, Joanne and Dennis DeLomba, Erika Dugas, Erin Flood, Kevin Gatta, Ernest Jolicoeur, Jay Lacouture, Denis Leonti, James McLean, Helen Farmentier, Dianne Reilly, Michelle Riccitielli-Leonti, Christopher Terry, Kevin Timme, Claudia Widdiss and Michael Yeomans.

Seven entries in the Rhode Island College Chamber Music Series this fall will offer a range of music from solo jazz violinist Mireille Proulx to the classical renditions of the Ariel Quintet.

All performances are at 1 p.m. in Roberts Recital Hall 138. Members of the College community and community at-large are invited to attend free of charge.

Opening the season on Sept. 25 will be the voice and piano music of adjunct music faculty member Richard Cumming with performances by mezzo-soprano Georgette Ross Hutchins and baritone Rene De La Garza. Cumming will accompany on piano.

Jazz violinist Proulx, who comes from Montreal, will perform both classical and her own jazz compositions on Oct. 9.

The Ariel Quintet, comprised of New England Conservatory graduates and recipients of artist's diplomas from the Long School of Music, will perform Oct. 30. The Jubilee Trio will present a program of vocal music entitled “The Great American Songbook: African-American Composers and Classical Song” on Nov. 13. Concert and oratorio soloist D'Anna Fortunato, who has appeared internationally with the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center, will perform Nov. 20. She has researched and performed extensively the little-known vocal works of Franz Liszt and Charles Loeffler as well as those of women composers such as Clara Schumann, Fanny Mendelssohn and Amy Beach. Pianist Rieko Aizawa, who has appeared at Tokyo’s Casals Hall and the Kennedy Center, will perform Dec. 11.

Up-coming issues of What's News will feature details on each performance. John Pellegrino is series coordinator.

RIC Theatre promises a solid season of stage hits

Three plays, the annual Spring Dance Concert and a blockbuster musical will be staged this season by Rhode Island College Theatre.

William Inge's Picnic, the first entry of the season, will run Oct. 3-6; Luigi Pirandello's Six Characters in Search of an Author will run Nov. 14-17; Agatha Christie's The Mousetrap is Jan. 17-20, 24-27; and the annual spring dance concert is March 6-9, and the traditional end-of-season musical, Rodgers and Hammerstein's The King and I, will run April 24-27.

All evening performances are at 8 o'clock and Sunday matinees at 2 in Roberts Hall auditorium.

Picnic tells the story of a not very bright college football player, turned tramp, who arrives in a small Kansas town on a hot Labor Day and causes complications in the lives of a handful of women who find themselves attracted and repelled by the ruggedness of a crude kind of masculinity they had never encountered before.

Written by Inge immediately after his first stage success, Come Back, Little Sheba, which was later made into a movie, Picnic scored a great hit when first presented in New York in February 1953. It ran there for 61 weeks and won the Pulitzer Prize, the Drama Critics' Circle Award, the Outer-Circle Award and the Theatre Club Award as being the best play of the year.

One of the few plays of the early 1920s that has continued ever since as a part of America's dramatic heritage, Six Characters in Search of an Author is the imaginative drama of a fictional family who rebel when an author drops their story and insists that it be carried on to its conclusion.

Generally considered a modern classic, the play's appeal has been so constant that it was produced seven times in New York up to 1965. One New York critic commented in 1963 that this was an "avant garde" play.

The Mousetrap is the imaginative drama of a fictional family who rebel when an author drops their story and insists that it be carried on to its conclusion.

Fall RIC Dance schedule to feature collaboration with Paula Josa-Jones Performance Works

Paula Josa-Jones fall residency and performance project with the Rhode Island College Dance Company "will provide our community with an opportunity to experience work by this important New England artist," according to Dante Del Giudice, RIC dance director.

The project will run from Nov. 2 to Dec. 6 and involve Josa-Jones in residency activities that will result in a new commission created for the RIC Dance Company.

Dancers from throughout the community will have an opportunity to experience Josa-Jones' process during nine open company performances.

Two concerts slated for fall season

Rhode Island College Symphony Orchestra with John Sumerlin on violin and Judith Lynn Stillman on piano will perform Mendelssohn's Concerto for Violin, Piano and String Orchestra in D Minor under the baton of Edward Markward in a Monday, Oct. 21, concert in Roberts Hall auditorium starting at 8:15 p.m.

Also on the program will be Wagner's "Elisa's Procession to the Cathedral" (from Lohengrin) and Hindemith's Mathis der Maler Symphony.

On Monday, Dec. 9, also at 8:15 p.m. in Roberts auditorium, the RIC Chorus and Symphony Orchestra will perform Ernest Bloch's Sacred Service (Avodah Hakodesh) and Richard Cumming's Ovation, which was commissioned by the RIC Chorus. Baritone Rene De La Garza will be featured.

Tickets are $7 for these concerts with discounts for senior citizens and students. For more information, call the RIC music department at 456-8244.
